JULY 2025

What's Trending

International Conference on Cyber Security (ICCS)

FTI National Security served as the Platinum Sponsor for the International Conference on Cyber Security (ICCS) from July 14-16 in New York City. The event is co-hosted by Fordham University and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), and brings together experts from the private sector, public sector, and academia to explore the toughest cybersecurity challenges facing our world today. This year, Global Head of Cybersecurity Anthony J. Ferrante spoke on a panel covering modern incident response from containment to pursuit, and Head of Cybersecurity for the Americas Jordan Rae Kelly participated in a panel discussion on critical infrastructure, disaster recovery, and telecommunications.

Service Spotlight

Cyber Incident Response Simulations

Why Now:

Ransomware group Scattered Spider is on the rise, disrupting major organizations with sophisticated ransomware attacks. Using social engineering, they deceive employees into divulging credentials, then swiftly hijack systems and operations. Cyber incident response simulations, also known as tabletop exercises, help prepare organizations for the chaos of a ransomware attack before it's real.

How FTI Cybersecurity Can Help:

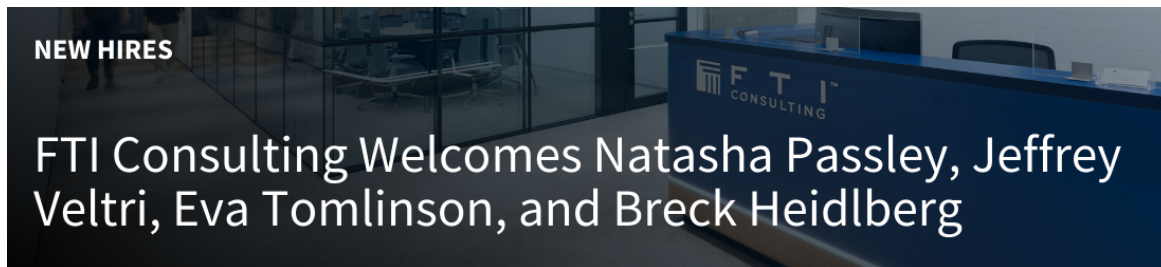

With an emphasis on training and learning, FTI Cybersecurity's preparedness planning services focus on developing best practice crisis management skills and knowledge. Considering unique qualities, we can design a cyber incident response simulation that best suits your needs. FTI Cybersecurity will improve the various phases of an emerging crisis, discussing options and making consequential decisions at each juncture.

Watch:

In this video, Matt Chevreux outlines who should participate in incident response simulations, including C-suite executives, general counsel, IT staffers, and customer service reps, and what to know about the exercises. Watch Now >>
